Between 1925 and 1930 there was a vibrant industry with the ability to produce and screen films made from locally made acetate film (British Empire Movietone) in various forms. In 1931 there was a boom with the release of the hugely successful, Joy Road directed by actor and filmmaker, Denys Coquard. The inception of sound film in 1948 produced a wave of new sound based films. The industry bounced back from 1950–1970 with a decline through to the present day. The 1980s saw a resurgence when the industry saw a period of growth but was also associated with industry corruption. History In 1925, the film industry opened up with the first domestic production of an 'authentic' African film. The blacklisted director of the film The Making of Jazz directed by Reginald Barker, was a daily newspaper editor who used his newspaper as a conduit to ensure that his friends could make films that were financially beneficial to them. The British Empire Company had the studio to produce the film at the London office and the films were distributed throughout the British Empire. The industry attempted to grow again in 1936 but this was unsuccessful. Cinemas were established at the end of the 1920s. The first cinema was established in Accra in 1926 and was known as the Gaillard Cinema. The next was the Abbey 1cb139a0ed
