

If you are looking for ServiceTool v2000 then you have come to the right place. Thanks! A: What kind of problem is it? The worst kind - not enough information to help. Since you provide nothing but a file name, we have to gather info from other sources. One suggestion is that the file you downloaded is in the group of images. Check the file name for GIF, PNG, BMP etc. As for your command line, the only thing it seems to mean is, you have code that you hope will work. There are two problems here - first, you run your PowerShell in powershell.exe not powershell.ps1. Second, you need to invoke cmd.exe, which is the command shell. Again, one suggestion - look for a file named, for example, powershell_script_3.9.0.0.ps1. You can use powershell.exe by double-clicking it or typing powershell.ps1 in the start menu. When you start powershell.exe, it will pop a pop-up dialog where you can select which version of powershell to use. It also lists the currently loaded modules that are available to you. So if you don't have the version of powershell that you are running, select the one you want to use from that dialog. You can also type powershell -? to see a list of available commands and their help. You will not learn anything by attempting to run notepad files. They have zero relation to the.ps1 file extension. The file extension is just an indicator that the file has some processing properties. It is completely unrelated to what the file actually is. Double-click the file to run it. It will run in a separate window. The command window will be hidden, with nothing visible. As for the command you list in your question, you did not include it. But here's one I ran for myself to see what it does: PS C:\windows\system32> dir /s /b /a-d *.exe The /a-d switch means "available to download". There are many files to choose from, but PowerShell will list the extensions to download. The /s switch means "search subfolders, but only the top folder". All of the included files are in a subfolder named "bin". The search starts in
