Field of the Invention The present invention relates to polyolefin films or sheets using a polyolefin resin, particularly ionomer resin, as a principal ingredient. 2. Prior Art Many kinds of polyolefin films are being used for wrapping or packaging various articles, particularly food products, for delay of their deterioration. Some of such polyolefin films are inferior to polyethylene, polyvinylidene chloride, and polyvinyl chloride films in durability and processability for practical use. Some other polyolefin films are required to undergo new and practical improvement so that they may be used as wrapping or packaging films for high-quality articles. In such a situation, it is rather demanded to have highly resistant films which are composed of polyolefin resin as the principal ingredient. Some improvements in such films are actually made but the resultant films are much inferior to those of polyethylene and polyvinyl chloride, particularly in adhesiveness. Known improvements in the adhesiveness include a method wherein a liquid rubber material, such as ethylene-ethyl acrylate
