What is the purpose of the title field? Which is the most common use? Which is the least common use? Do I really have to put a description if the title already is a "short description"? A: The title field allows you to identify the file type. You put a description into the title when you create the file. You may want to use other fields for more information about the file and you may not want to include the information in the title. For example, when you uploaded a file to the web you may include the title and put a short description there. On the other hand, you might use the title to put the file type (video, mp3, etc) and the description to provide more detailed information about the file (whatever you choose to put into the description).

What is the purpose of the title field? The purpose of the title field is to "label" the file. Each file type will have a default label and the software will look for that when you want to open a file that has a certain extension. In this way, the software knows what type of file to expect. For example, a file with the extension mp3 will be expected to be an audio file. Which is the most common use? The most common use is to identify the type of file. Which is the least common use? The least common use is to "label" the file. Do I really have to put a description if the title already is a "short description"? Not by default, but you can if you want. For example, when you create a new file, you can use the description to give more details about it. But you will not be creating the type/label for it automatically. Which is the least common use? The title field allows you to identify the file type. You put a description into the title when you create the file. You may want to use other fields for more information about the file and you may not want to include the information in the title.
