Short and long-term effects of an informal education program on reducing burns among an occupational group. The objective of this study was to assess the effects of an informal education program on reducing burns among an occupational group in the north-western region of Iran. The studied population was firefighters working in the northern areas of Iran. The study design was a quasi-experimental pre-post experimental study, with comparison to control groups. Data were collected using a questionnaire, anthropometric measurements and the modified Sterling method. The Mann-Whitney U test was used to compare the mean of variables before and after the intervention. A total of 350 firefighters participated in the study. The mean age of participants was 29.5 ± 5.5 . The mean time for working on the job was 17.3 ± 8.9 years. The mean weight of the participants before the intervention was 80.9 ± 9.7 kg and 74.5 ± 10.2 kg after the intervention, which was statistically significant (P<0.05). Our relationship with the homeless has long been a rich one, but one that is often overlooked. Over the years we've experienced "village" life. Those incredible networks of trust and solidarity. The wonderful hours spent walking together, sharing concerns, or simply letting down your guard for a little while. However, do you really know your neighbors? Boston is a city that has chosen homelessness as a community issue. A problem we have all been invited to commit to. We are committed to a livable, affordable

What's New In?

The present invention relates generally to fluidic manipulations, and more specifically to the control of fluidic flows or streams to provide various fluidic effects, including controlled cooling, reaction, or heating of fluids. More specifically, the present invention relates to an apparatus for operating a plurality of plugs or valves on a common wall of a heat exchange channel which collectively control the flow of a fluid. The need to control the flow of a fluid stream in a specific or a desired manner for a variety of applications is well known. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 5,743,296, which is incorporated herein in its entirety by reference, teaches the use of a plenum defining a plurality of interconnected chamber for feeding and guiding a continuous fluid stream. A plurality of fans are disposed at one end of the plenum. The fans extract the continuous fluid stream and direct the extracted fluid stream into a plurality of recesses in the plenum to control the flow of the extracted fluid stream. One of the problems with this prior art construction is that the thermal energy is lost or dissipated as the extracted fluid is guided around the plenum. Thus, there is a need for an improved flow control apparatus which allows for optimal cooling of a fluid which is extracted from a continuous stream of fluid.

Robert Albert Fulton (Luddite)

Robert Albert Fulton (1798–1855) was an English Wesleyan Methodist minister and pioneer of the British Luddite movement. Life The son of a London solicitor, he was born in 1814 in London. After spending a period in Germany and France he studied at the King's College School (now Kings College London), where he matriculated in 1828. He became a fellow of the London Mathematical Society, being of use in the committee on both classical and mathematical knowledge. He was ordained in 1831, serving as curate in Preston, Lancashire and in Birmingham. On 16 April 1834 he married Mary Ann Elphinstone the daughter of a prominent Birmingham Unitarian minister, and he moved to Edinburgh in 1834, becoming incumbent of the Mill Hill Chapel. It was here that he was to develop a friendship with the religious leader Robert Halliday Hudson (1808-1891) and influence the latter's conversion to Methodism. A small number of Sunday evening services were led by Fulton in church premises. In 1835, Fulton became a Methodist. Leaving Edinburgh in 1837, he took a post as
