0. 3. 4. Select the brush or Pen Tool. Click in the image where you want to start the brush effect. In the above example I clicked in the upper-right area of the image. Click with the brush or Pen Tool to add paint onto the image. The paint you add is just the color of the image, so the color of the brush, marker, watercolor or marker you use doesn't matter. To duplicate pixels from one area of the image and paste them into another area, hold down the Alt key as you click with the brush or Pen Tool. This changes the brush to the "Clone Stamp" tool, which allows you to choose a target area and copy pixels from the source image to that target area. To create a mask, hold down the Shift key as you click with the brush or Pen Tool. The white area will select pixels where the brush is applied, and the dark area will select pixels where the brush isn't applied. If you want to adjust the size of the mask, press the number keys 1 through 4 until the desired size is selected. To create a gradient, hold down the Control key as you click with the brush or Pen Tool. This selects the pixels of the selected area. Use the Brush Tool's "Define Brush Preset" feature to create your own brush. Click the Brush icon at the bottom of the Toolbox and choose Define Brush Preset. Type a name for the preset in the Text Box. You can click outside of the box and on the preview image to define the brush. Click Apply and OK to apply the preset. You're now ready to use the preset brush. Double-click the newly defined brush to open the Brush Options dialog box. The brush settings you see here are the same options that you'd find if you choose Image→Adjustments→Brushes→Brush Preset Settings. There are many variations of the Brush Tool. The blossom that held a century after it first started blowing has already withered on the Sino-Korean Peninsula. The botanists who had travelled to Mount Chiri for the blooming of a special orchid say the fall of the flowers is a huge loss. The orchid they are waiting for is called the Sino-Korean blue, and it is one of the rarest orchids in the world. They are of the genus Barleria, and were only ever seen in South Korea's Mount Chiri, so until recently it was one of the nation's greatest treasures. But last month, the flowers that bloomed between the 8th and 9th centuries came off the mountain. Lee Jin-seok, general manager of the Sino-Korean Blue Orchid Science Preservation Foundation, said, "When the temperatures of February and March were relatively high, the snow on the mountain melted in a short period of time, and the blooming flowers of the orchid disappeared." He continued, "This is a big loss, because it is one of the rarest orchid flowers in the world. And there was a report that flowers that were only spotted in the past 16 years bloomed in Mt Chiri in 2018. This has increased the possibility that more of the rare flowers will disappear." One of the century-old blossoms of the Sino-Korean blue orchid was saved for posterity, and is preserved in a glass case at the Jeju Discovery and Science Museum in Jeju-do. There are also rumours that it is said that there is another well of the precious flower in Jeju-do, but this has yet to be confirmed. Lee said, "An orchid, if you look at it closely, can be around 20 years in age. The flower that was preserved at the Jeju Discovery and Science Museum is probably just a few years old." The Sino-Korean blue orchid, a subspecies of the orchid Barleria madagascariensis, was found at Mt Chiri in 1953 and 1958. Some scientific documents say the growing area is 300 square meters, while the university that manages the flower counts about 500 square meters. But recently, the mountain became a national shrine of Jeju, and became even more important than before. Lee said
