Their description reads as follows: "The year is 1969. The U.S. and the Soviets are dangerously engaged in a tense race for the top of the space race. Willow the ex-insane asylum patient, is sent on a suicide mission to erase the alien infection that happened to her nine years ago. She must travel to a far away and mysterious planet, that suddenly appears in the outskirts of our solar system and erase a black hole there. The planet is governed by a bio-organic race of giant plants known as the Eosians. With a special device that she obtained from the Eosians, she is able to jump into these black holes and erase them from existence. But a whole new world has been waiting for her for the last nine years, the place has been drastically altered from the one she knew. Earth, nine years ago: Nine years ago, something terrible happened to our world, something so unimaginable that even science fiction writers couldn't really come close. A bio-organic virus that was created by a rogue alien race known as the z'ha, corrupted our DNA, altered our genes, changed the way we think and perceived things, and made us into something that, being human, we do not really understand. The z'ha took advantage of this, and created a working prototype of a virus that could erase humanity. They didn't do this to make things worse for us, they did it to stop them from being the evil, sadistic monsters that we now believe them to be. Planet Eos: A planet that was once just like ours, until the z'ha arrived and changed everything around and, 9 years later, has now been totally transformed into a world that didn't exist in our timeline. All the people that lived here (that's why it's called the 'Eos', that's the name of the planet) now live as a single, massive organism. As humanity dies out, there is only one hope for us, the Eosians. They believe that the z'ha are trapped in an endless, mechanical torture machine, where they start over again every day and are working to free them. The Eosians believe that the z'ha are such bad people, that if they were to come back to this planet, they would destroy it. So, they are trying to prevent humanity from repeating the same mistake, and stay out of this planet's way. So they left, and we never heard from them again, but they are out there. Maybe on the planet Eos, in a world without
