Hmmm, that may be a little more involved than I envisioned. That article was worth noting for sure. Thank you for mentioning that. Well done Tom! Also makes browsers look a lot more elegant in my opinion. No more ugly and endless spans wrapping their links. My own observations are that a few of the browsers have the ability to do this. This is one of the features I use Chrome for. When I'm mobile I want a browser that's efficient but quick to respond. Apple's Safari and Google's Chrome are my favorite browsers on mobile. Internet Explorer isn't pretty, very slow but it usually does the trick. I tend to use Chrome when I'm in a desk top environment and Safari on mobile. I'm just not happy with the situation for Internet Explorer. I hate the interface and the rendering. I always get intermittent display issues with IE. Just not so happy. Hmmm, that may be a little more involved than I envisioned. That article was worth noting for sure. Thank you for mentioning that. Well done Tom! Also makes browsers look a lot more elegant in my opinion.
