SYNOPSIS The role of the Learning Assistant is to examine the learner's progress and to allocate more or less resources accordingly. This is done to ensure that the content has not been wasted and that the level of knowledge obtained is sufficient to meet the demands of the course and its pace. We want to use the word 'assist' here to imply as little 'intervention as possible'. The Learning Assistant is not expected to teach, only to make sure that the lessons are adequately covered and that the learners are becoming more fluent in English. In the online 'learning' environment, we are not talking about book learning, but about courses in English speaking countries where the learners can already expect that English is the main language. What the Learning Assistant really does is to check if the learners are doing well in the short-term, however, some students in the course will need more help with the long term than others. The Learning Assistant is not merely an educational aid. It will also make sure that students pay attention and know what they are doing. It will not, however, interfere in the learning process. The Learning Assistant tries to resolve problems on the spot, but will also report the problems or the information it finds so that someone can solve them. The Learning Assistant is a set of tools that work together as a team. It constantly scans the whole learning process for problems, which is why it is important that the students understand that it will not encourage them to do something that might be against the rules of the school. The tools will not ask the student to do something that is prohibited. They will work with the student and try to find the solution on their own. The goal is that the student feels relaxed and does not get the feeling of being oppressed. This applet is used in the company 'Dial-4'. Using it, you can check the design of a bottle or can.
