The transfer of hASCs to muscle and integration into the tissue may improve muscle function. The clinical translation of all these trends A lot of challenges remain in human and large animal studies, which are precisely the sources of uncertainties about the translation of this research to clinical therapy. As we have already outlined, the use of the term "cell therapy" must be carefully interpreted. In his report, Cell Therapy (2017) published a schematic representation of the different criteria to define the term "cell therapy" in the title of the article (p. 6). Probably the authors chose to move away from the term "stem cell therapy" in order to clearly establish the concept, as previously proposed by Scuderi and Serori.^{[[@ref10]]} Thus, "cell therapy" should not be considered as a synonym for "stem cell therapy," but it is a broad term that highlights the beneficial role of cells in disease diagnosis, treatment, and rehabilitation. In this sense, a subgroup of the "biotech" or "cell" sectors became subject to the development of laboratory-ready product, and in the past few years the industry acknowledged the need to define the meaning of "cell therapy" in the title, either as a synonym for "stem cell therapy" or as a product that could be defined as a "cell therapy" and moreover is compatible with the regulatory framework of the products. The first clinical trial using hESCs (Pituitary Adenoma) was recently published, \[[@ref51]\] with expected indications in the coming future.

Regarding drug delivery, the strategy of the injection of the cells into the proximity of the damaged tissue, \[[@ref52]\] appears to be the most important, not only due to the massive improvement of

Trial to start for Aboucassol Judge Jessica Recuenco on February 6 (Ricardo Rodriguez/Reuters) A trial began on February 6 to examine alleged police torture in Tindavan prison in Algeria during the weeks surrounding the January 31 presidential election. Laurent Fabius, a lawyer acting on behalf of the victim, Aboucassol, and five other detainees, is contending that they were beaten by police before and after they were taken to the prison, according to Le Nouvel Observateur magazine. During the trial, evidence was submitted that one of the accused is Aboucassol's brother, who is in the police. It was also confirmed that the trial was initiated by the victim himself, upon being released from Tindavan, although he was never given the opportunity to do so. Meanwhile the Algerian senate's defense committee has approved a request from Defense Minister Ahmed Abdelaziz to raise the amount of the national defense budget from 545 billion dinars to 568 billion dinars. The increase is "necessary to meet the country's commitments in the period from January 1 to June 30, 2016," notes the state-run National Algerian Press Service. The government has until December 15 to approve the 2011 budget. "The increase will take the defense budget to 550 billion dinars," the security official added. [Epidemiological, clinical and therapeutic aspects of Burkholderia cepacia infections]. Burkholderia cepacia is a Gram-negative bacillus, which is commonly isolated in the environment, particularly in soils and plants. It produces nosocomial infections, particularly in patients with cystic fibrosis (CF) and in the intensive care unit. The two most common presentations are lung infection and systemic infection. In CF patients, B. cepacia affects the small airways, leading to bronchiectasis, and it spreads via the airways to the respiratory and circ
