I Ask HN: What to do about my very needy, hyper-competitive, friends? nodivbyzero in today's world, friends become less a matter of choice. The ease with which one can reach any given person has gone beyond simple socializing and has become, in some cases, a necessity. People are now more likely to call or text their friends rather than just talking to them in person or in a conversation. The problem here is that many people, myself included, have friends who are self-centered and judgmental and they have the power to pull us under, which ultimately tends to make us defensive and more prone to yield to them. Many of us have had friends who would never dream of having a conversation with us in person but were hellbent on making sure we knew they weren't happy with something we did. These are people we end up wanting to please, or we feel ashamed to disappoint, and these friends keep dragging us into the
