Professor Lawrence (Larry) Hamilton's popular textbook on waves, vibrations and  $\hat{A}$ . Ask HN: Why are so many HN users in Austin, TX? - geezits I'm in Austin, TX and the majority of HN users seem to be from somewhere else. Is this due to the universities? ===== billpatrianakos I'm from Austin and this is true. At least half the people I know from here have studied at UT, in fact it's sort of the mecca for tech here. We also have a lot of high-level startup companies here that attract tech talent from all over. I'm actually moving to the Bay Area in a few weeks... for a startup. I've always been between two cultures and I guess this time I'm making the hometown move. It takes something more than me going there to suck them all in though. I've had friends from Austin tell me that they have a lot of tech talent in the areas they were raised in so it's possible more than just the universities drive this. ~~~ gee\_totes I'm from Portland, OR and have also moved to the bay area. I think both cultures are important. There are things in the bay area that I enjoy but there are also things in Portland that I enjoy. Everyone is still going to their respective places to socialize, mix, and work on projects. ----- krapp Austin's kind of a college town, so it may simply be that people are more likely to move from the college to the tech.
