Character creation ▲ Create your character Fantasy RPG world : World map ▲ Each dungeon is rich with character Additional game informationQ: x-axis representation of y-axis ranges I have a histogram with x-axis ranges between 0 and 0.5, with equal intervals (0.5 = 50% of the full scale). Can I represent this with a vertical line that shows the 0.5 mark, instead of the tick mark, since the visualization is not what I want. Thank you. A: If your data is 1-dimensional the simplest way is to just create a contour plot. A contour plot is a two-dimensional plot where the x-axis is plotted for the y-axis and vice-versa. Contour plots are made by connecting the points that form the contour level through a line. Matlab has a built in function for this, viz. contour. A contour plot is simple to make. If you have a 2D array A then contour plot(A(:,1),A(:,2)) creates a contour plot of the first column for the second column. The figure automatically looks in the right range: contour(rand(20)); If you need the entire range of your data, you can add a z-axis that can be used to slide through it: contour(rand(20), [0,0.5], [0,1]); To make a vertical line you only need to make an extra dimension for z: contour(rand(20), [0,0.5], [0,1], z); contour is actually a wrapper for the built in contourc function. 1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a method of manufacturing an ophthalmic lens and, more particularly, to a method of manufacturing an ophthalmic lens, such as an ophthalmic lens for a contact lens or a spectacle lens, having a surface having a concavo-convex shape. 2. Description of the Related Art An ophthalmic lens, such as a contact lens or a spectacle lens, has heretofore been manufactured by press-molding an optical lens into the desired shape. The shape of the ophthalmic lens can be set in various shapes by press-molding an optical lens

What's new:

A Tale of 16 months. Every day, I felt that I'm making a progress in improving my English. I have tried to tell this story with detailed descriptions, so that people can enjoy the game more. I have written down every word I have used in a Korean dictionary and repeatedly read them in order to get the precise meaning. I hope you will feel like I write the story because you enjoy it. We plan to release the game at the end of this year. For now, it is still very far from what I want to create. I would like to hear some opinions from you and your approach. I will gladly listen to your opinions.

What really happened with those pills and the window washer?" "Hey Stu, I think they're keeping their stories to themselves," Stu said after stepping outside the room. "Why?" "Because they have nothing to do with the company's stock options. The stock options payoff will come when you become managing director. Once your stock options are distributed, you're out. If you're found to be withholding stock option information, you're out. And I don't think anyone has any idea that your stock options will fall into that category." "Really? And if they did know, they'd keep it to themselves because you're more important to the company and they wouldn't want to get you in trouble. They're waiting for you to become managing director." Stu leaned close and said, "I think you better tell your wife what's going on. You're going to have to stay out a bit longer." Stuart leaned in close and whispered, "But when I become managing director, I can tell them everything." Rick looked at Stacy and whispered, "I still have a job if you want me to keep it." Stacy nodded and in a loud voice said, "My husband is not an accomplice. If he is charged with a crime, he will clear his name. And I'm only part owner of this corporation. I don't want it to fold because of a single individual. Also, I can't take anything that I own because my husband is not an accomplice to anything." Stuart looked at Rick and said, "I still have a job
