Fiddling with the software Photoshop and Photoshop Elements are the same program, but Photoshop is the one you use when you have a graphics project that needs editing. Adobe has released an update to Photoshop for the iPhone called Photoshop Fix (see Figure 13-2). It's a handy tool that saves you having to use the expensive Photoshop program on the computer. (The main difference between Photoshop and Photoshop Fix is that Photoshop Fix is free, but you still have to buy the basic software.) FIGURE 13-2: Photoshop Fix is a free tool for editing digital pictures taken with your camera phone. Each version of Photoshop is based on a major release of the Mac OS, and the current version is Version 13. However, Adobe has added new features and changed things in existing programs every few versions. Adobe expects developers to update applications at least every few years to incorporate new features. ## Windows Software The term `_digital imaging software_` usually refers to programs that let you create images from scratch. If you don't want to create images from scratch — that is, if you'd rather just drag and drop things onto your desktop — you can use a program such as Paint, Adobe Photoshop, or Microsoft Paint that's bundled with Windows. A `_raster graphics program_` refers to a program that lets you manipulate graphic images after you've created them. Raster graphics programs include Adobe Photoshop, InDesign, Illustrator, and GIMP. If you have a graphics program on your computer, you can find Photoshop's icon in the Windows shortcut menu. The programs are frequently updated, but different versions are available in earlier and later Windows versions. ## Identifying Your Tools Okay, so what are these things on the edge of the page? Don't worry;

It is ideal for those who prefer a user-friendly interface, or those who want to get started quickly. There are six Photoshop Elements web apps available for free. On the left are the keyboard shortcuts for most of the tools available for editing. These are shown in use on the right. For Mac users, the Mac menu item is the same as the keyboard shortcut. They are still Photoshop Elements so they are the same as the normal 3c8c677930

[Schwann cell transplantation in regeneration of axonal lesion after spinal cord injury]. To study the effect of Schwann cells transplantation in the regeneration of axonal lesion after spinal cord injury (SCI) in rats. SD rats (50) were randomly divided into the control group (n=15), the prepared group (n=30), the transplant group (n=15), and the transplant and prepared group (n=15) by random number. The prepared group underwent the SCI, and the transplant group underwent SCI followed by cell transplantation. The control group underwent the same operation except that the cell transplantation was not performed. The rats of each group were sacrificed on the 7th, 14th, and 28th day, respectively. Spinal cord samples of the rats were taken for the analysis of the pathological change, apoptosis, and expression of extracellular signal-regulated kinase (ERK) and c-Jun N-terminal protein kinase (JNK) in the lesion area. The rats in the control group showed vacuolar degeneration in lesion area, neuronal apoptosis, with decreased phosphorylated ERK protein expression and phosphorylated JNK protein expression, but no change in nuclear factor kappa B (NF-kappaB) expression, on the 7th day after the injury. The rats in the prepared group displayed similar pathological changes on the 7th day after the injury, and the rats in the transplant group showed the nerve fiber sprouting and myelination on the 7th day after injury. On the 14th day, the rats in the control group showed decreased NF-kappaB expression, and the rats in the prepared group showed no obvious change of the expression of NF-kappaB. The rats in the transplant group showed increased NF-kappaB expression, but no change of ERK or JNK expression. On the 28th day, the rats in the control group showed similar pathological changes to those on the 7th day after the injury, while the rats in the transplant group showed the scar. On the 14th and 28th day after the injury, the rats in the transplant group demonstrated increased expression of phosphorylated ERK and phosphorylated JNK compared with those in the control group, while the rats in the control and prepared groups showed no obvious change. The rats in the transplant and prepared groups showed increased ERK and JNK expression on the 7th day after the injury, and the Distal femur fractures: imaging with the bone SPECT/CT protocol. Distal femur fractures are common injuries, and imaging with computed tomography (CT) is standard for assessment of these injuries. This study compared the efficacy of the dual-isotope bone SPECT/CT with the CT protocol for detecting occult fractures after distal femur fractures. This retrospective study used a bone SPECT/CT dual-isotope protocol to image 48 patients (24 men, 24 women; age, 35-96 years; mean, 58 years) with a nondisplaced, closed, extracapsular, subtrochanteric, or femoral neck fracture. A CT protocol was also used in 37 patients. The bone SPECT/CT images were interpreted in a blinded manner and the CT images were interpreted as part of routine clinical care. For the 37 patients examined with the bone SPECT/CT protocol, fractures were identified in 10 patients and an additional fracture was identified in 21 patients. For the 48 patients, the CT protocol showed a fracture in 17 patients and an additional fracture in 38 patients. All fractures identified with the bone SP
