Asphalt, hereinafter referred to as asphalt, is the most common paving material used for roads, parking lots, driveways and sidewalks. Asphalt is a mixture of bitumen and aggregate particles. Bitumen is a viscous black or brown liquid when heated at high temperatures. It is derived from natural gas or petroleum when heated. Its physical properties are set forth in ASTM D 1642 and the Chemical Abstracts Service (CAS) Index. Bitumen does not adhere well to aggregate particles. Therefore, the asphalt should be modified by some type of binder in order to provide the necessary strength to hold the aggregate particles together. The most common types of binders used are asphalt emulsion, cutback asphalt, asphalt additive, asphalt cement and other asphalt mixes. Bitumen reacts with an asphalt emulsion. As a result of its reaction with the asphalt emulsion, bitumen becomes more adhesive and adhesive strength increases. The asphalt em aa67ecbc25
