script after typing a command? i have a python script witch i have to execute with subprocess. i want to run the script, then type some command and after it i'd like to close the script. I don't want the script to close as soon as i write the command. I was thinking something like:

try: command = input("Write command: ") except: break try: print"my script" subprocess.call(['python','my_script.py']) except: break try: print"I want to close the script now" break except: break

Could you please help me?

---

A: You can call input inside a thread, and trap it using a signal handler with a global lock. See here for an example. To terminate the script you can use a custom signal handler, and generate it in the main thread. For example:

import signal
import sys
import threading

def signal_handler(signal_name, signal_no, frame):
    global lock
    my_exit = True
    with lock:
        my_exit = True
    signal.signal(signal.SIGINT, signal_handler) lock = threading.Lock()
try:
    while True:
```

---

```
command = input("Write command: ") if command == 'exit':
    signal_handler(signal.SIGINT, signal.SIG_DFL, None) break
