A man who appeared to be a tourist bought the Victoria memorial at Buckingham Palace, British authorities said. The man was filmed taking a bronze bust of former British monarch Queen Victoria off the premises at the western gates Thursday. It's not clear whether he knew he was taking the bust, which is not displayed publicly, Royal Parks spokeswoman Clare Endicott said. He was seen snapping it off its base, which contains the royal crest and five gold rings, and tucking the piece of metal in his pocket. The man, who wore sunglasses and a hat, wore a T-shirt and was seen carrying a camera. The man is not from Canada, Endicott said. Britain's Foreign Office said the British consulate in Toronto called the incident to the Foreign Office after being made aware of it.

The Effects of Different N-Acetylcysteine Parenteral Administration Regimens on Hepatocellular Injury in Acute Liver Failure. Hepatic paracetamol-induced damage was recently documented in rats treated with high-dose N-acetylcysteine (NAC), probably due to reactive oxygen species produced by high NAC concentrations. The beneficial effect of subcutaneous (s.c.) NAC dosing to improve survival in septic rat models has been demonstrated; however, the optimal dosing regimens for NAC have not been defined. We studied whether the choice of NAC dosing regimen affected hepatocellular injury in acute liver failure (ALF). Rat models of ALF were produced by paracetamol (300 mg/kg s.c.) and lipopolysaccharide (50 µg/kg i.v.), and received saline, NAC i.v. (200 mg/kg bolus and 25 mg/kg/h) or s.c. (100 mg/kg three times daily). Terminal plasma samples were obtained for drug and protein analyses. The extent of NAC serum protein binding was determined by ultrafiltration, and the NAC degradation ratio (DOR) was calculated by dividing the NAC concentration in samples obtained 24 hours after a 200 mg/kg bolus by that in samples obtained immediately

But it was unclear if the arrests will be enough to calm the anger that has erupted since the fish trader was killed during a demonstration at the Bourj Safi market in the south Moroccan city of Safi. The body of the trader Mohamed Zrouer was found on Saturday covered in blood after a group of men had gone into the market in a bid to calm the angry crowds of fish sellers who chanted slogans accusing the authorities of killing the man.

Saturday's violence was the fourth wave of protests since September that started in the Rif region over the fish trade and later spread to other cities. The protests have been taking place in towns and cities across the country - from the capital Rabat to the northern cities of Al-Hoceima and Nador. "The unrest will continue in the coming days," Moroccan journalist Ammar Radkane told the German news agency DPA on Sunday. "The people are being attacked physically, socially and economically by the authorities. Corruption is [also] a big problem," Radkane said. Defending the death of Zrouer, the interior ministry denied any involvement in his killing, and said that all those arrested are "suspects in the murder". The ministry called on Moroccans to avoid "any provocation" towards "law enforcers". As a result of Saturday's unrest, some 53 people were arrested, with some of them being transferred to the capital Rabat, an interior ministry official told AFP news agency. "There have been no clashes in Bourj Safi, despite rumours and in the aftermath of a tense situation," the official said. Earlier on Saturday, local residents locked down the market after the death of Zrouer. The market is controlled by the state, and is part of a touristic attraction in a region where fish is a well-respected local product. Zrouer was run down by a car near a produce market, where fish
