The present invention relates to a new and distinct Rosa hybrida plant, botanically known as Rosa hybrida, commercially used as a container rose and hereinafter referred to by the name 'Ancer'. The new Rose plant is a product of a planned breeding program conducted by the Inventor in Zuidwolde, The Netherlands. The objective of the breeding program was to create new container rose varieties with numerous attractive flowers. The new container rose plant originated from a cross-pollination made by the Inventor in 2004 of a proprietary selection of Rosa hybrida identified as code number 38052-03, not patented, as the female, or seed, parent with Rosa hybrida 'Ancer', disclosed in U.S. Plant Pat. No. 18,568, as the male, or pollen, parent. The new Rose plant was discovered and selected by the Inventor as a single flowering plant within the progeny of the stated cross-pollination in a controlled greenhouse environment in Zuidwolde, The Netherlands in 2004. Asexual reproduction of the new Rose plant by cuttings in a controlled greenhouse environment in Zuidwolde, The Netherlands since May, 2005, has shown that the unique features of this new Rose plant are stable and reproduced true to type in successive generations.

Corrosion desensitisation of cutting edges of mining and industrial tools such as picks, chisels, claws, shovels, and related tools subject to demanding conditions, especially those exposed to heavy metal or high pressure environments, may be accomplished by using an appropriate hard and wear resistant material for the cutting surface, such as hard tungsten carbide or hard metals. However, a great disadvantage of such hard materials is their high unit cost. As a result

What's new:

-2000 Noël Coward My first night in Hong Kong. A new freedom AND WHAT YOU WOULD call an Arabian Adventure: Diamonds and rickshaws and a Chinese sun climbing up into the sky. I'm here with friends Jack and Sue — as well as two enemy soldiers. Let's see if they'll treat us as well at the Venus Island. I remember being surprised at how English he was, although I didn't know why I felt like that, as he was wearing his shirt inside out. Four of us had ended up in the lobby of the Intercontinental Hotel at eight o'clock that night, and we were looking around for our individual taxis. The thing is, there were two symbols printed on the cars — and they're very difficult to tell apart. You get one after four, one after six, and two others for every other number. Four of us had got taxis on the seven after night, three on the four and another one on the one. There would be a 50:50 chance that even if we'd paid our fare that we wouldn't get where we wanted, but there was also a chance that we would. The problem was, Sue and Jack weren't aboard a taxi at all, and I remembered worrying about our bicycles, thinking that as far as taxis went, they probably had far more room, and getting into taxis with bikes and all that, but no — under the dome of the city, all the taxis were occupied. This is when we found out that our friends hadn't been placed in any taxi, nor on any bus, and they were later found on one of the street performances. (Shortly afterwards, we discovered that Sue had actually got on a bike taxi — I remember standing there talking to her while in that blue-and-yellow cab singing 'I Won't Grow Old While I Love You' from "The Boyfriend") Our first problem now was the Mandarin Hotel, the place that we'd decided to sleep in, and we thought the
