The present invention relates to a bearing housing assembly for a fluid actuated cylinder and/or piston assembly. Such assemblies are frequently used to operate valves or other assemblies within a fluid distribution system, such as a municipal water distribution system. Typically, the cylinder body includes a bore opening through one wall thereof which communicates with an exterior region of the cylinder. The cylinder body also contains a fluid inlet chamber and a fluid outlet chamber, at least one of which is located adjacent the bore. The fluid inlet and outlet chambers communicate with the bore in fluid flow relationship. In operation of such an assembly, the cylinder is inserted into an opening of the valve, as, for example, illustrated in U.S. Pat. No. 4,788,366, issued to Thomas A. Dohil et al. on Nov. 29, 1988, and incorporated herein by reference. Fluid is supplied to the cylinder through the inlet chamber. The fluid is delivered through the bore to the outlet chamber and then to the workpiece. A return path is provided through the bore and the cylinder to the inlet chamber. The bearing housings are supported within the cylinder body and are located adjacent both the inlet and outlet chambers. They are formed with an exterior opening which is in fluid flow communication with the bore and the exterior region of the cylinder. It has been found that in some situations, particularly under high pressure applications, the bearing housings will fail or leak. These failures are caused by extraneous material and/or debris which enter through the exterior opening of the bearing housing and the bore of the cylinder. The extraneous material and/or debris are attracted or impelled by the dynamic forces created in the cylinder. These force create pressure differentials which urge or drive the material or debris into the interior of the cylinder or bearing housing. At least some of these extraneous materials and/or debris eventually escape into the environment and/or impact other components of the fluid actuated cylinder assembly. This causes premature wear of the cylinder, bearing housings
