Let's say

I have a word dictionary app written in iPhone. I want it to be able to "check" with the server when the user requests a new word. For that, I want to connect directly to the server. Now, I can make a server with an HTTP API and everything. I can even check with the server with some sort of traditional REST, and when a user requests a word, check with the server, perhaps store it locally in the iOS device to not use too much data for every request (kind of like caching). But my question is: how do I do this with the minimum of code required? Do I have to create my own socket code? How do I do it? Do I have to make a program that converts word into a JSON string, then I convert it to an HTTP request? If so, does it have to be a server? Or maybe someone has good examples to this type of programming, please, I'm very new to this and I'm stuck. PS: this is for an Iphone only A: Simple way, create your own socket server using TCP and then get data in tcp headers from iOS device. If you want to go with REST then use NSURLConnection. Here is link for NSURLConnection and example. Q: How to use RemoveListener for iPhone I'm trying to use RemoveListener 6d1f23a050
