Samsung MI 1670 Chip Reset Rar

samsung is prone to give out a lot of sticker-chips in it's products. sometimes these are just there to add a little extra profit, sometimes they are just there to do a little extra marketing. this is what had happened to my clp-315w. the firmware was badly damaged when the printer was shipped from samsung, and the manufacturer did not provide any support for this error in the manuals, so i had to fix the problem myself. i simply replaced the chips and then fixed the firmware. if you are lucky enough to have a printer that makes a beeping noise when the paper is jammed in the printer, this is not a normal situation. you can ignore the beeping, the printer is just trying to tell you that there is a paper jam. what most people don't realize is that there is a simple way to fix this. you need to replace the chip, and here's how. i had a particular problem with a printer from a friend, a samsung clp-325w. the printer would beep after power up, which was quite strange. after a lot of searching i found the cause of the problem. when new, the chip on the printer gets stuck. it is a very weird problem, and is not mentioned anywhere in the manual. however, there is a little sticker on the side of the printer which you can easily remove. the sticker has prongs on it, and you can use them to reset the chip, and get the printer to work. it is a very simple process and all you need to do is replace the chip, and then you should be good to go. i had a printer which had a firmware bug, but after replacing the chip, i had no problem. so don't throw your printer away if you have this problem.

the first line of data is the header. the header shows what type of message is being sent to the printer. the next line of data is the command. this tells the printer what to do with the data. the data consists of a message that is sent from the toner cartridge to the printer. the message is formatted to tell the printer what information is being sent. once the printer receives the message from the smart chip, the printer will know what information is being sent and it will know how to process the data. in order to reset the page counter on a samsung ml 1670 printer, follow the steps below. be sure to unplug the printer from the wall before attempting this hack, or you will damage the components of the printer. print out the instructions below for reference. i was able to download the firmware from the bin file on the printer's site. i printed out the instructions and then used the new firmware to reset the chip. i have not tried to print a test page, however, based on the instructions, the new chip should be able to print and the remainder of the printer will work as it did before. i will probably have to purchase a new toner cartridge in the near future but, since i now have the printer working again, it will save me time and money and i can continue to print. i am happy to report that after resetting the chip, the only noticeable difference is that the toner feeder window is not translucent anymore. this was a direct result of the reset, so if you also have this issue, it is the same issue as i described earlier. i decided to fix my printer's firmware with a tool. this takes a few minutes and is easy to do. it also does not reset my wifi settings every time i put it on/off. it is called a firmware fix. its a firmware update for your printer that installs an altered firmware. this firmware resets your printer every time you power cycle the printer. it also does not reset your wifi settings every time you put it on/off. 5ec8ef588b
