I'm writing a REST API, using Java, Spring. I'm new to REST. I think I read that it's not compulsory to use POST method to update resources. What are the reasons for that? A: Using POST method is compulsory in REST API; because if you didn't use it then your api can be exposed to hackers (cause he can send any value for your params)... Also, when you update a resource, you need to send the whole resource, so if you don't use POST method then the updater cannot send the resource you want to change. A: For any REST API, PUT is not mandatory. The reason why you see that PUT is considered mandatory is that its usage is the expected one. The "expected" way to update a resource is using the URI (your URL) to issue the update request. If you want, PUT may be a good choice, but only if your REST API design follows the REST principles and guidelines. If you want to model your API as a REST, you should use the defined HTTP methods to inform about the API behavior you want to convey. PUT will inform the API that you want to update a specific resource. POST will inform the API that you want to create a new resource.
