One of the main themes of the book is that love is a choice. Buscaglia writes, "Love is not something that just happens to you: it is a certain special way of being alive. Love is, in fact, an intensification of life, a completeness, a fullness, a wholeness of life." He encourages readers to choose love over fear, hate, or indifference, and to be open to the opportunities and risks that love entails.

Another theme of the book is that love is a growth process. Buscaglia writes, "Love is always changing and, unless it is constantly growing and evolving it dies." He suggests that love requires constant learning, adaptation, and creativity. He also stresses the need for self-awareness and self-acceptance as the basis for loving others. He writes, "To love others you must first love yourself. You can only give to others what you have yourself."

A third theme of the book is that love is a universal phenomenon. Buscaglia writes, "Love knows no barriers. No matter what may separate us - age, sex, race, religion - we are all human beings capable of loving one another." He explores the different expressions and manifestations of love across cultures and history. He also acknowledges the challenges and obstacles that may hinder or harm love, such as violence, abuse, prejudice, and ignorance. He urges readers to overcome these barriers and to seek harmony and peace with themselves and others.

The book also contains several exercises and activities that aim to help readers develop their love skills. For example, Buscaglia suggests that readers write a love letter to themselves, list the qualities they admire in their friends, practice giving and receiving compliments, and express gratitude for the people and things they love. He also provides some questions and topics for discussion and reflection, such as "What does love mean to you?", "How do you show love to others?", and "What are some ways to enhance your love life?"

Born For Love: Reflections on Loving is a book that offers a positive and uplifting perspective on love. It is a book that challenges readers to examine their own attitudes and behaviors towards love and to improve them. It is a book that invites readers to join Buscaglia in his quest for a more loving world. As he writes, "We are all born for love. It is the principle of existence and its only end."
